NATIONAL VIOLENT DEATH REPORTING SYSTEM (NVDRS)

Violent deaths are a serious public health problem in the United States.

- Every hour, nearly six Americans die from violence-related injuries and a total of 57,000 people die by homicide and suicide annually.
- Violent deaths cost $77 billion in annual medical and work-related costs.
- U.S. males aged 15-19 are five times more likely to die from violence than those in other OECD countries.

Data to inform policy: Violent deaths are preventable. To obtain the data necessary to track violent deaths and eventually develop prevention strategies, CDC administers the NVDRS.

- NVDRS is a state-based surveillance system that centralizes information from a variety of state and local agencies and sources – medical examiners, coroners, police, crime labs, and death certificates— to better characterize and monitor violent deaths.
- NVDRS provides tools necessary for public health officials and policymakers to design and implement targeted prevention efforts.

The 2014 World Health Organization Global Status Report on Violence Prevention calls on Congress to strengthen data collection on violent deaths from multiple sources and promote linkage of data to provide more complete and comprehensive information to inform prevention efforts.

NVDRS has been essential in identifying problem areas and developing successful prevention efforts in Massachusetts:

- Massachusetts joined the NVDRS program in 2003, and the data from MA-VDRS have been used extensively by the Massachusetts Suicide Prevention Program to provide timely and detailed information on suicides.
- Several small communities located near metropolitan areas in Massachusetts have been able to identify trends in violent deaths using MA-VDRS, which has allowed them to better target their prevention programs and resources.

Recent Call for Expansion of NVDRS: In a special report issued in January 2013, the Mayors Against Illegal Guns called for full implementation of NVDRS.

The National Violence Prevention Network supports the President's request for nationwide expansion of NVDRS by providing an increase of $9 million to the CDC Injury Center.
